Dina Ali (b. 1975, Saudi Arabia) is a Palestinian-American artist based in Los Angeles whose multidisciplinary practice explores how humans shape, inhabit, and remain emotionally attached to the spaces around them. Her work considers overlooked urban environments and the subtle psychological and emotional conditions embedded within land, architecture, and the built landscape.

Drawing from her background in architecture, urban design, and city planning, Ali approaches space not simply as a physical structure, but as a repository of memory, experience, and human presence. Working across painting, drawing, and material experimentation, she transforms observations of urban and peripheral landscapes into evocative studies of place, displacement, belonging, and the passage of time.

Dina holds an MFA from the California Institute of the Arts. Her work has been exhibited internationally and has received support through several respected residencies and grants, including the Golden Foundation, Misk Art Institute, Hambidge Center, and the Puffin Foundation. She continues to investigate the complex relationship between people and the environments they inhabit, bringing together architectural sensibility and painterly inquiry to reveal the emotional life of place.

Where am I?

This work explores the surreal spaces produced by technological expansion and shifting power, and how they are changing our relationship to place and to one another. In this series, Dina builds environments that slowly come apart. Each scene holds, but refuses to add up. The disorientation and alienation are the point: the work echoes the instability of the virtual and physical environments we now occupy and witness.
